In this capacity, they work closely with managing directors, vice presidents, associates and other analysts in the firm. On a daily basis, analysts interact with client executives, working with other bankers to help guide clients in their financial decisions.

The analysts at Goldman Sachs gain exposure to the firm's businesses and expanded knowledge of the investment banking industry, as they develop key analytical, communications, marketing and sales skills. Analysts create and analyze financial models, performing scenario analyses and tests to examine the effects of client alternatives. In addition, analysts organize and prepare presentations, which explain industry trends, discuss client options, and recommend strategies to meet client goals.
