Dear Fellow Society Members and Stakeholders,

The responsibility of the volunteer army of CFA Society Cleveland is to deliver value to our membership. Value is at times a difficult word to define. The Board of CFA Society Cleveland uses our mission statement as our guide in bringing value to the membership.

The mission of CFA Society Cleveland is to promote professional development, ethics, and awareness through outreach to and engagement with the financial community.

Professional Development

Whether it's through CFA Society Cleveland's active Job Board, the annual fall Career Day, evening networking events, or at our typical luncheon programming events, there are many ways that members can utilize the resources of the Society to enhance their career. Our website should be a member's first source of information for all that the Society has to offer. If for any reason you can't find what you need, please reach out to myself or Cindy Nace (cfa@cleveland.cfasociety.org) directly.

Engagement with the Financial Community

The most important constituents with whom we wish to engage are you, our members. As you know, our Society is amongst the most active globally, particularly in relation to our size. We offer a high quality event calendar with traditional luncheon speakers as well as several new event ideas with the hope of increasing the value of membership and your engagement.

The traditional luncheon programming schedule for the current fiscal year will have over twenty five dates, filled with the high quality speakers that you expect. Our Programming Committee has also introduced several Luncheon Panel discussions on a variety of relevant topics. Additionally, the Society has put together its groundbreaking Women in Leadership Speaker Series. These programming events have and will include panel discussions on promoting women's leadership, the importance and the impact of female investors, and the benefit of corporate board diversity, to name a few. Finally, we've tried a few evening, larger networking events. The first took place in the fall at the Cleveland Museum of Art. The most recent occurred this past week at the Aquarium. Look for an end of year event in May for members at Hofbrauhaus.

Included in this newsletter is a celebration of CFA Society Cleveland's 65th Anniversary. Take the time to read our Member Spotlight that includes a look back at our society from five of our members.

We've heard your feedback and suggestions over the past several years and have acted. We strive to make your membership as meaningful to you as possible and use your feedback to help shape future events. Keep the comments and suggestions coming.

Thank you for your continued support.

Sincerely,

Tom Jalics, CFA

CFA Society Cleveland History

CFA Society Cleveland, formerly The Cleveland Society of Security Analysts, was founded in 1950 and provides investment-related programs and services to its Northeast Ohio-based membership. The CFA Society Cleveland has approximately 500 members, and is a member society of CFA Institute, formerly the Association for Investment Management and Research (AIMR). AIMR was formed in January 1990 as a combination of the Financial Analysts Federation, founded in 1947, and the Institute of Chartered Financial Analysts, and was renamed CFA Institute in 2004. CFA Institute currently represents more than 130,000 members who include the world's 120,000 CFA Charterholders, in 150 countries and territories.

1. How has the financial services industry changed, both in Cleveland and nationally, since you began your career?

Many more financial boutiques today, rather than a few large firms; much more diversity today, with more women and minorities; gobs more financial products and therefore, more choices to be made; much less New York- and Boston-centric, with mini financial centers now including Milwaukee, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Atlanta, etc.

2. What does the future hold for the financial-service industry?

(speculation?) orientation; larger scale; more emphasis on speculation on a catalyst rather than long-term fundamental investment.

3. What advice would you give to new charterholders that you wish someone gave you?

Stick with an emphasis on long-term fundamentals (strong balance sheet, high returns on equity, invested capital, and sales; dependable product lines), rather than chasing a momentary fad.

4. How has the CFA Society Cleveland changed since you joined?

CFA Society Cleveland Changes: Far fewer Company presentations, as opposed to general topic presentations; far less focus on Cleveland-headquartered companies; far fewer CEOs presenting.

5. Anything else you would like to add?

Desserts, especially chocolate, are better than ever!!!

Jim Kirk, CFA, Charterholder Since 1977

1. How has the financial services industry changed, both in Cleveland and nationally, since you began your career

In the 1970's the business was dominated by the banks - there were few independent investment advisors. Before the end of fixed commissions and even afterwards, before commissions really started to slide, brokers competed for business with extensive research - I remember research reports that ran 50 pages or more. In the 1970's, before we got Quotetrans, we got quotes by having our trader call a brokerage firm every hour. I remember when I first started in 1972 we used slide rules. I bought a Texas Instruments four function calculator a couple of years later.

4. How has the CFA Society Cleveland changed since you joined?

We used to meet in the smallish American room at the southwest corner of the Mid Day Club in the Huntington Building. Later, as attendance increased, we moved to a larger room. The programs in the 1970's and 1980's consisted almost exclusively of company presentations and we usually had one of the top two people in the firm. Later we started to get CFO's or investor relations people. I think companies found different ways of communicating. I remember that the investment firms in Cleveland were very supportive of the CFA program and that there was no shortage of volunteers for CSSA work such as Arrangements Committee, Program Chair, Treasurer, Secretary. Sometime in the 1990's the Society donated $25,000 to Case Western Reserve University's endowment fund to seed a program in which graduate business students would manage the money. The hope was to stimulate interest in investment management among the students, the majority of whom were Clevelanders and likely to stay in Cleveland. Professor Tom Morrissey ran the program and several of us spoke to the class every year. Oak Associates in Akron later donated a huge amount of money to be managed by the program. When Prof. Morrissey retired the program ended.

1. How has the financial services industry changed, both in Cleveland and nationally, since you began your career?

Not long after I became an investment analyst at National City, "May Day" happened when fixed commissions were eliminated. This had the impact of institutional commissions on the buy side going down greatly while retail commission levels actually for a time went up. This had significant cost saving impact for institutional customers, however, it came with it a downside. Many boutique investment research firms that largely just offered great research could not garner enough commission dollars to survive and many were acquired or went out of business.

Then and Now, Thoughts from Members

I would next point out that in Cleveland and Northeast Ohio were many medium and larger sized brokerage and money management firms that over the years were acquired. Even though some of the assets stayed locally often the senior decision makers were no longer located in the area.

Finally, many of the large institutions in town that managed pension or individual retirement type accounts had a genuine focus on the longer term investment horizon and returns. Particularly in regard to equities managers and analysts, they could focus on longer term growth potential of stocks and what they might be worth. All too many investors today have the attention span and investment horizon of a gnat.

2. What does the future hold for the financial-service industry?

Regarding the future of the financial service industry, I will focus on the investment side. Clearly size has its benefits and although there is plenty of room for small and medium sized firms they are going to have to provide value to their clients. Index related investing is inexpensive but provides little real value added. Well considered investment plans for customers, in depth research and well crafted portfolio focused on the long term can provide the benefits that are well worth the modestly higher costs. relatively

3. What advice would you give to new charterholders that you wish someone gave you?

I would change the question slightly since the question I often get from college students is what do I need to get into the business. The answer is simple to get an M.B.A. or equivalent and a CFA. I would tell a newly minted CFA that a great place to start is as an investment analyst, if that person does not have that experience already.

4. How has the CFA Society Cleveland changed since you joined?

The CFA Society has changed a great deal over the years and especially since I served as President in the mid 1980's. The proliferation of investment information and news through multiple channels and the need for companies to disclose information in an even handed way has an impact on what the local Society delivers. The Cleveland Society always had an active luncheon meeting schedule. The bulk of those meeting often featured senior executives of national, regional and local companies delivering an in depth look at their companies or industries. Today it often is difficult to attract those type of presentations. While the luncheon presentations today often are on a wide variety of investment related topics by people from a more diverse set of backgrounds. I think there is value in both types investment information.

1. How has the financial services industry changed, both in Cleveland and nationally, since you began your career?

The speed of information flow changed dramatically. In the mid 1970's a broker's role was to provide news on companies and from the gov't releases.

2. What does the future hold for the financial-service industry?

Consolidation is likely as too many participants.

3. What advice would you give to new charterholders that you wish someone gave you?

You have to continue to distinguish yourself from the pack.

4. How has the CFA Society Cleveland changed since you joined?

I am very proud of the Cleveland Society, it has been recognized for multiple achievements over the years. The weekly meetings have evolved from company specific to a much broader list of financial topics.

5. Anything else you would like to add?

People can make a difference as viewed through my 35 years in the Cleveland Society as to effective programming. It is a lot of work, but the good contributors stand out.

Pete Klein, CFA
Charterholder Since 1984

Pete Klein, CFA, Charterholder Since 1984

1. How has the financial services industry changed, both in Cleveland and nationally, since you began your career?

As I began my career in 1979, the banks locally and national dominated the financial services industry. They eventually were replaced by the mutual fund industry, the big broker-dealers, and hedge fund industry. A rather balanced approach to investment management was also eventually replaced with highly specific and tailored products. Currently, the industry has multiple layers of services provided by independent advisors, wealth managers, online software, and the traditional providers: banks, insurance companies, hedge funds, index providers, and brokers. More people are offering more advice through more venues than four decades ago. There is a greater focus on risk management, but performance results are not far behind.

2. What does the future hold for the financial-service industry?

The financial service industry will continue to evolve so that it reflects the customers it is trying to serve as well as the conditions that present themselves to these customers. Today, the baby boom generation is retiring and starting to use the accumulated wealth. This is a huge change that will need innovative responses. Also, the provider is now more of a generalist who outsources product development and who desires to engage the customer in a discussion of wealth management rather than security selection and portfolio construction. These are still very important elements, but they are more than likely outsourced to firms focused on those activities.

3. What advice would you give to new charterholders that you wish someone gave you?

Most of the best advice I received had nothing to do with investing. It had more to do with how to approach work, relationships, and the world of business. If you put your best effort into your work, whatever the outcome, you will experience a deep satisfaction with your work and career. Understand that the investment business is not solely a return business. It is a communication business: you have to learn to communicate your ideas clearly and persuasively and listen to others as they try to do the same. Lastly, do all you can to earn the respect of your colleagues and treat them the utmost respect. Be a professional, hold no grudges.

4. How has the CFA Society Cleveland changed since you joined?

The Society has evolved into an education and outreach organization over the years. More members have been drawn from the financial services industry rather than just the security analysts' community. This is all for the better. As a former Society President and Program Chairman, I am proud how the Cleveland Society, for its size, provides many excellent programs and opportunities that only the money center cities offer. We are small but mighty!

5. Anything else you would like to add?

The financial services industry is still an exciting and demanding industry in which to make a career. It is challenging to create an approach or a product that serves the needs of those seeking advice. Also, this industry allows the participants to meet many wonderful people and to form warm and deep relationships with colleagues as well as clients.

MIDWEST INVESTMENT CONFERENCE

Midwest Investment Conference 2016

The GOP convention isn't the only major event occurring next summer in Cleveland, Ohio. CFA Society Cleveland (CFASC) will be hosting one of the largest regional investment conferences in the Midwest, congregating institutional investors with senior management of publicly traded companies in an exclusive corporate access event. The conference, front running the Republican National Convention by less than a month, is being held on June 22, 2016, at the luxurious Renaissance Cleveland Hotel, located on the city's newly renovated Public Square.

Unlike broker/dealer and investment banking sponsored meetings, the Midwest Investment Conference attracts a diverse audience of RIAs, plan sponsors, portfolio managers as well as independent, buy- and sell-side analysts. Now is your time to get personally involved in this high-visibility cause. All CFASC members, as well as those from Societies around the Midwest, are encouraged to invite high-quality public issuers wishing to share their value-creation strategies directly with the buy side. We respectfully ask that at least one C-level executive attend from each presenting issuer. In addition, vendors wishing to reach targeted decision makers at public companies and/or asset management firms are encouraged to participate as sponsors and demonstrate their commitment to the capital markets.

CONFERENCE FORMAT

- Formal issuer presentations in an auditorium setting
- Pre-arranged small group and one-on-one meetings in private settings

There is a $2,500 fee for issuers to help defray costs and make the conference possible. All promotion, invitations, signage, printing, audio-visual equipment with technicians, room fees, food, beverages, valet parking and more are included. Webcasting is also available for an additional cost.

Sponsorships are available at several affordable levels!

Please call conference administrators at 216-255-6290, with any questions or to request collateral to share with prospective issuers and sponsors. You may also visit the conference website at www.go2mic.com for additional information.
